In certain ways writing is a form of prayer.

— Denise Levertov
Editors

— JESSICA HALSEY
— PAULETTE MEHTA
— DEB MOORE
— REBEKAH SMITH
— ANNA M. WALTHALL
Contents

INTRODUCTION 6

ABOUT CALS WRITING CIRCLE 7

— ANNA M. WALTHALL 8 – 10
— JAN HAMLETT 11 – 13
— RACHEL LUEBKE 14
— LUIS UZCATEGNI 15 – 17
— MARY HALEY PERRY 18 – 21
— MICAH MATTSON 22 – 30
— SHIRLEY STICHT SCHUETTE 31
— TOM HUTCHISON 32 – 62

CONTRIBUTORS 63 – 64
Every April, writers and creatives across the map celebrate National Poetry Month. For thirty days, we honor the great poets of our past by spotlighting new and promising works and encouraging everyone (and anyone) to connect with their inner poet. This year, the CALS Writing Circle hosted a month-long challenge. For every day in the month of April, a new prompt in the form of a single word was given to our writers—words like wake, spark, thaw, clear.

When we sat down to plan the challenge, we set a few goals. We agreed that if April came to an end and we had at least fifteen poems, we would consider the contest a success. The days ticked by, but our inboxes never came up empty; every morning there were new poems to be read. Now here we are with a completed anthology of over fifty poems, all written by local writers!

We wish we could celebrate their hard work in person. We wish we could hear each poet read their work over hot coffee. For now, however, we offer this digital collection and a virtual round of applause.

With that, we hope these poems bring you joy. They certainly have for us.

Cheers,
Bekah Smith & Deb Moore
Central Arkansas Library System
Central Arkansas Library Writing Circle

CALS Writing Circle offers encouragement, critiques, workshops, and classes to central Arkansas writers. We welcome writers of all genres and any level of experience. The Writing Circle meets on the third Saturday of each month at the Main Library at 100 Rock Street in Little Rock, Arkansas.

Email dmoore@cals.org for more information.
Coffin Man

Try to ignore him if you can,
But everyone hears coughin’ man!
His window is adjacent to four neighbors,
And is wide open for his pulmonary labors.
He routinely begins at the break of dawn,
Long before I’m ready to yawn.
I open one eye and peer at my phone,
Then pull up my covers and moan and groan.
His smoker’s cough preludes his death,
So long and deep, he can’t catch his breath!
“Ahem!” He croaks with a croup!
“Hack! Ahem! A Whoop!” Yes, try to ignore him if you can,
But everyone hears coffin man!
In an instant, things can change.
Wires in your brain can rearrange.
Young or old, it matters not;
Neither does income, potential, or life lot.
Your brain controls what is what, and what is where.
And who is who and about what you care.
We all better live like there is no tomorrow.
Bring people joy, avoid all sorrow.
Dance under the moon, in the rain and in the sun.
Do what you should and then have some fun.
Let all of your hurts go – feel them flow down streams.
Don’t just live – realize your dreams!
Create a plan and then work towards it daily.
And don’t get downtrodden; embrace life gaily!
Laugh and sing and turn flips if you are able.
Refuse to be defined by your past or a label.
You get to decide if you’re successful or a wreck.
This is the time for a reality check!
Stretch Bird

Stretch bird!
Then gaze around;
Perched high above the ground.
Spread wings, twist tail, then lift a leg.
Yoga?
I hear the creaking
of the hinges
on the door
as it closes.

But I smile.

I know another --- somewhere else --- has a key unlocking it.

So I wait.

The shutting of a door
once stirred panic,
but tonight
I feel no fear.

Only hope.
Search: “carefree day” . . .
I used to find them.
They were made of play-homes laid out with sticks,
mud-cookies so delightful
your auntie almost ate one,
and clever clover jewelry cherished for its flair.
They were trimmed with poufy cloud-shapes shifting with the breeze into ever new designs.
These charming days (in great supply)
were finished off so neatly with wishing on a star
and one last bit of sparkle, fireflies in a jar --- twinkling, blinking, winking --- as you dreamed away the night . . .
Search results:
“Carefree day no longer in stock.
Suggest crafting one for yourself.
Check Pinterest.”

Etsy Search

— J A N H A M L E T T
Good Morning Moon

Good morning, moon . . .
nice to see you there.

Coffee in hand . . .
steps quite slow . . .
the day ahead . . .
thoughts in flow . . .

Stop!
Look!

What a surprise
in blue morning skies:
a lingering glimpse of yesterday . . .

soon to be gone.

“You let it go, too,
and begin anew”
(a whisper from the pale, fading orb).

Good morning, moon . . .
nice to see you there.
Easter Weekend, Reaching

I went on a drive through the city, through the country.
Spring flowers climbed everywhere, not discriminating.
Primrose took over the highway, and swaths of yellow flowers stormed bright, open fields with rain-logged roots, drowning, their washed-out faces reaching for air and sun.

You are there alone.

I went on a drive through the country, through the city.
The sun, warm and magnificent, comforting—but the flowers, drowning, drowning, drowning.
You are there alone, behind the cold brick building in the city, drowning.
Right across the road.
Serendipitous purple flowers,
Among golden buttercups,
Weave about the mellow clovers
In tomorrow’s hot hyssops.

The wind that blows my airs to me
Carries something new this spring:
A faint caress has fallen free
From the greeny eversing—

The newly leaves of hickory
And oak abounded canopy, Stricken by the sun they glee,
Form a veily verdant Sea,

And piney scents of cedar glade,
Darkened through late winter waves,
Carry their caress arrayed
Out of shadows, gorge and caves—

The mighty rivers rush anew, Unbeholden and unbound,
To give life its auspicious queue
And spring forth its freshly found.
Run

Day and go. Run the Sun Summing a day ago like an Abacus.

And the moon it goes, too,
Running away afar—
A neatly placed reminder:
Redemption is at hand.

Toward the sum, running away ago
To nearly a reminder that—Again and again—
The sum of these reminders
Is merely a mirage (like the moon, it goes,
Running away afar).
Arattled, a shaking, the distant trees undulating Earth moves free—
A fault. A spring. A fall.

Water, too, falls—
Bubbly orbs suspended briefly,
And then returned to an explosive display of Disorder and disarray.

And yet, life seems so unfazed, Disobeying the orders of thermodynamics
Which call toward entropic, deterministic chaos.
Chemistry, instead, offers an organized intermission Between brief life and its quick transition.

And the cycle perpetuates:

Within you lie the remnants of stars Fueled by a sun that gnars and chars, Fed by an Earth, for better or worse,
And fated to whiteness the infinite curse:

All eras must end, and anew begin—
Some say it’s eternal, but to the contrary,
All change is just temporary.
Iniquity

“Sins of the father,”
But a mother’s sins are equally potent Sins remembered
Sins forgotten
Horrors of the haunting hours –
Children cursed.

— Mary Haley Perry
Perjury

“Do you believe this is a fair and equitable settlement?” The ad litem for my five-year old asked.
“Yes.”

“Do you believe this is a fair and equitable settlement?” The insurance company’s attorney asked.
“Yes.”

“Do you believe this is a fair and equitable settlement?” The judge asked.
“Yes.”
But he’ll never again reach the monkey bars with two hands –
There is nothing fair or equitable about that.
At 38, I contemplate, all the firsts behind me – first date, first love, first job, first child.
At 38, I contemplate and insulate.
At 48, I contemplate, spontaneous combustion – stop, drop, roll, STOP, DROP, ROLL!
At 48, I contemplate and calculate.
At 58, I contemplate, self-fulfillment – plastic, opioids, medical marijuana, retirement, hobbies.
At 58, I contemplate and pray, “Oh, God, let someone Formulate, hypoallergenic plastic.”
At 68, I contemplate, how young my ancient Grandpa left.
At 68, I contemplate and celebrate Infinite love and laughter.
At 68, I contemplate and celebrate and Anticipate.
next…
Pay Dirt

Facing off
They sit atop her bed,
His mouth open for the surgeon,
A reluctant patient
Anxious for the recovery room.
Fingers, floss, and facial tissue – O.R. tools, She pushes
He flinches
She pulls
He howls
And scurries to the bathroom
To assess the progress in the mirror.
Climbing on the cabinet,
Operating alone now
He pushes
He flinches
He pulls
He howls, “I GOT IT! LOOK! I GOT IT!
Pay dirt –
Money in the morning.
It's an idea, just an idea.
The idea of forgiveness.
The idea that mistakes can be forgiven,
that broken relationships can mend.
But not for me.
My mistakes are too big,
too many broken relationships to mend.
Too many hurt.
Friends, family, shocked and betrayed.
I apologize but their hurt is still there,
a wall between us.
I think distance will help bring forgiveness,
but it only brings resentment.
Some forgive but the memory is still strong.
Those who don’t, despise me,
"I got what I deserved."
But they can never know what I got,
They can never feel it.
So to me it’s just an idea,
the fleeting idea of forgiveness.

—Micah A. Mattson

Forgiveness
Change

Everything is change,
these poems are change,
every day is change.
Our position is constantly changing.
But many changes,
only take place,
if you let them.
Simple poems can change you,
but only if you stop,
and let it happen.
Runaway Train

When I hesitate, I—Oh dear,
I lost my train of thought.
This happens surprisingly often,
It happens every time I—Do something or other…
It’s rather hard to explain because it happens when—

—MICAH A. MATTSON
Clear

Few things are clear to me, things that are clear to me seem to be confusing to others around.
So I just don’t make a sound.
But when I do inform,
it always starts a storm.
So I keep myself quiet,
for fear of causing a riot.
They don’t want to know what I see.
Telling them seems to guarantee,
that they ignore what I say,
and once again turn away.
Lift

I could use a lift,
I've been set adrift.
By whom I'm not sure,
but I hope that you're,
willing to lend a hand,
and I hope you understand.
I'm not asking for much.
I only ask to get in touch with the sane part of my mind,
So would you be so kind?
As to help me shift?
Cause I could really use a lift.
Expired License

As I start my poem I find that I cannot stray from fact,
and what a boring poem that creates.
Then I remember with dismay, my poetic license has expired.
I hurry to the DFA (Department of Foolishness and Absurdity), but of course I don’t have the right documents.
After returning home, gathering the documents, and driving back, I finally have it.
My poetic license returned.
Now I may go about spinning my half-truths and weaving with my words.
I may continue to confound my readers with my ponderings on everythings and nothings.
That is how readers like their poems,
deep and confusing,
filled with riddles and mysteries.
For a poem without poetic license is a boring one.
I need something fresh,
no more repetitive, bland, boring days.
I need something different.
I need something new,
a reason to get up.
Anything to look forward to.
I can't take any more of the same.
Some hate change,
I feed off it.
So I need something fresh.

— MICAH A. MATTSON

Fresh
Everyone is running.
Some run from what they see,
I run from what I don’t want to see.
Some run from what they hear,
I run from what I don’t want to hear.
Some run from what they feel,
I run from what I don’t want to feel.
The things people run from the hardest,
Are the things they know that they can’t run from.
I run hardest from the things that I know have already caught me.

—MICAH A. MATTSON
Sun

If we saw it shine for just a moment,

Our path lit by a solitary ray.

Would we praise it as if it were God sent?

Or expect thousands of rays every day?
I wake each morning
and I wonder, what’s the point?
The answer? WONDER, of course.

— SHIRLEY STICHT SCHUETTE

Untitled
Bright

Curtains fail to restrain the dawn and morning sneaks through windows flooding amber light upon unruly quilts rumpled during the night’s foregone rest

In the golden glow motes float in the peaceful air and we devote that moment to watch them eddy and spin passing through and within beams of sunlight bright as the expectant day Breeze

Rows of plants stretch out
to a dispiriting distance

the sun reigns
in a cloudless sky

dry dirt shifts
beneath tired feet

a wooden handle
chafes aching hands

required to work
as long as there is light

the heat compounds fatigue

a rhythm emerges
from around the crop
two steps
then chop – chop – chop

nothing can appease
the angry sun
and a breeze feels like God's mercy
Change

The clink of spare change metallic symbols of empathy a physical manifestation of humanity
a visible sign of our capacity
for kindness
takes on profound meaning to someone in need beyond stray nickels
and quarters
and dimes
combined to buy a cup of coffee
or something to eat
they are symbols
that someone cares
willing to take the time to treat another person
like they matter
On the craggy rocks of the northern volcanoes where the barbarians hunt outsiders for food there's a plant that grows among the obsidian shards where frost collects but no rain ever falls the Phoenix Breath its claret florets hide among the knife-edge stone tiny blossom clusters evading the ruthless wind each petal like a blood drop from a pin prick you must collect its roots to make the elixir that protects you from death Go now that is your quest Adapt

Your absence brought me pain like the throb
of a severed limb
lost in the war
and the more I confront the strain
the more I felt the loss
the ache reminds me
you’re gone and I’m drawn to phantom desire that hangs on as though it’s still a part of me while it left me handicapped I adapt
I trapped the sorrow and wrapped it away
to allay the sting
so I can move through the day and live
The evening merits a toast cups of Baiju
clear as purpose
  and strong like coastal winds from the Yellow Sea
as we sit on a balcony
  among the skyscrapers wrapped in humidity
  and reveling in the polychrome aura from buildings capped with neon and phosphorescent light luminous
  radiant wonderous
an incandescent glow reflecting off glimmering facades until the cups are refilled and the host offers another toast to honor the success of the day Ganbei

— TOM HUTCHISON
Less

Less Less is less and less is more
and more is less than ever before distress the less
’cause it’s not more possess excess
for what it’s for finesse distress
before it roars
bless a yes
and you’ll get more less is a mess
left on the floor
obsess and stress
but don’t ignore express the blessed and do the chore
’cause less is less
and less is more
— Tom Hutchison

Chime

The chime from Daddy’s clock once allowed me to take stock
of the hours
until the dawn
the time drawn against the background
of night
until the light brought on leave to get out of bed Westminster quarters time is a human design to mark the progress of the future into the past sometimes slow
sometimes fast
until at last it stops
The essence of that night
lingers in memory
like an object
that I can feel and see soft, smooth and cool to the touch reminding me
it mattered so much
such passioned words
and cries
the unsaid goodbyes
and phases of grief
that now feel like lies because emotions fade
and the memories devolve
so I grasp the object and hold it with resolve before the pain is lost and feelings dissolve until nothing remains even the essence of that night

— Tom Hutchison
Fresh

— Tom Hutchison

Hottest
Summer
days
fresh fruit
robin redbreast
velvet
skin lenient
flesh gilded golden glorious sun
steeped sweet
and succulent
First

The immediacy of lips close enough
to feel the warmth of skin and then the spin of abandon as restraint is undone
in the air of shared breath
a moment so precarious perilous
adventurous
when the space between control and desire
melts away
in the heat of a first kiss

— Tom Hutchison
Flight

Flight 1292
San Francisco to Detroit
gripped by night
even as we loose the ground adroit travelers
pull shades over their eyes as we slip into skies of interplanetary darkness where ties to Earth seem to slip away
and through meager windows
the lights cities and towns appear at these heights
like an alien landscape
iridescent lichen
clinging to the rocks
of a strange planet
that exists
in permeant twilight
New

Wobbly
Shaking
Trembling
Quivering under unsteady weight
First steps taken without rhythm or gait standing,
stretching acclimating to strength
an instinctive drive to arise
and feel what it means to be alive
and find the power
to take a step into a new world Hope

I hope the sheets feel cold like winter-still nights when the air bites and immaculate skies reveal the frigid light of far-away stars so you might stay in the heat of my arms and nestle to my chest until you close your eyes and rest knowing I’ll keep you warm — Tom Hutchison Don’t hesitate
when the world skips a beat in that discrete instant in that moment
before it accretes
and falters
replete with doubt and fear
until it alters your resolve
and you retreat
to the safety
that revolves around the way things have always been

— Tom Hutchison
Lift

A controlled explosion to lift us
from the confines of Earth from all we know from God’s familiar designs to drift among the stars
unrestrained by gravity loosed from the laws that have governed
the way we interact with the world
so we can explore and grow
and evolve
and know things
with certainty
that we have never imagined

— Tom Hutchison
Ideas aren’t bestowed by generous Gods Given to the worthy and the clever
Do not believe that they stack the odds
To prefer another’s creative endeavor Vision is not a gift conferred by chance Nor the return of some random events
It is not the outcome of circumstance
Or the result of careless accidents
An idea is born from the essence of you Your experience makes it unique and true Combine diverse concepts in different ways
Add a surprise with a modern detail
Remove a trait that has become too stale Invent, transform, update and then rephrase

— Tom Hutchison
Walking against the tidal air blowing from the Hudson pushing toward the glowing zeal
of Times Square
it’s bustle and haste
left behind
for places more real among the slowing streets where people live
going about their days
in shared spaces
spared from the tussle
and crush of thrumming crowds I pass a garden on 48th where twines and vines climb the wrought iron fence and blooms open to the sultry dusk
Note

Holding a G flat
the soprano note
alone at the beginning of the movement
a tone to emote
the oneness of being to devote the character to loneliness
as her voice
floats above
the soaring melody
that suddenly turns from its lofty height
ebbing
falling fading
into silence
that echoes the emotion
of unrequited love
Reach

Stretch your arms to the expanse of empty skies exemplary in its indifference to the messy unrest that so defines our existence
on this cold planet

reach to the heaven
to touch the stars
and hold their promise of beginnings
and the steel of will that never gives up on creating order
out of the chaos

— Tom Hutchison
Ray

Uncle Ray died
sometime after the war
a training mishap
they told us
¬ a helicopter crash nothing less
and nothing more perhaps that’s all it was but that seems too pointless therefore, I choose to ignore the official account and imagine him
on a mission secret and dangerous hunting Nazi’s in South America or chasing Soviet spies in East Berlin
and so, a legend is born Remember

The Quarantine Trilogy

There once was a man who couldn’t remember
If it was Saturday, June or the 5th of December
He asked with dismay
What is the day?
Because every day seems like October

There was a man who couldn’t recall
If he showered today, this week or at all He knew he was sunk
When he smelled his own funk
And decided he’d shave in the Fall

A man sits alone in his room
With Webex and FaceTime and Zoom
He’s talking all day
With nothing to say
And he couldn’t be bothered to groom
Run

Run

Run away from Run to Run around Run through

Run up
Run down
Run the streets
Run the town

Run a circle
Run a square
Run a line
Run a pair

Run into Run where Run out of Run there

Run tonight
Run today
Run to leave
Run to stay

— Tom Hutchison
Awakened from a hammocked dream
by a whisper
a murmur
a blur of a sound
so quiet you convince yourself that you didn’t hear a thing but storms loom
where the sky meets the sea
mushrooming
blooming
consuming the bluest sky
charcoal clouds
immense and menacing
but soft thunder tumbles
through tropical air subtle
muted
almost not there worn away by the roar of waves and wind that never abates

— Tom Hutchison
Me got t’ree pieces o’ silver for Old Scratch
him done come yah
from the bottom land
and him-a say to gi you da renewal
    if me put dem inna palm of his hand
him comin’ to da balmyard singin’ a hoodoo hymn him comin’ round ’bout midnight fi on doin’ sin
him comin’ with resurrection
    but you soul done belong-a him

— Tom Hutchison

Renewal
Run 2

A one-word text
RUN

They found me even in the city where the world comes to live and forgive colonization
because the shops
offer rare luxuries
and no one sees London’s hidden underbelly I’ll walk
until I cross Westminster Bridge and then run along the Thames in the brilliant lights of the Eye
keeping to shadows because they’ll cover Embankment station but if I can get to Blackfriars and conspire to hide
I just might get away Seasoned acorns fall
shaken by shifting north winds Thunder on tin roofs

Twirling from maples weighted, veined shockingly strong Single angel wing

Dandelion fluff
blown into an empty sky Weightless Summer clouds

Watermelon pips
embraced in the sweet red flesh Sustain next Summer

Golden mustard fields
wave in the gentle breezes Seeds like the kingdom

— Tom Hutchison
Thaw

Left on the counter to thaw
brick hard
ice cream
so cold
it stings bare fingers
a layer of frost forms
on the package
lingering until the ambient warmth
temper the callous chill
until the ice
melts away
and the softened
sweet sanctuary
of vanilla
yields to the spoon
and bowl

— Tom Hutchison
— Tom Hutchison

Stir

When the night embraces us in black and the slack hours
trace the time until dawn dreams will come in place of reality
to bring back memory or forward a fantasy
when the visions
cause you to stir I’ll be the there to wake you
and take you in my arms
to tell you you’re safe
and that you’re only dreaming Wake

Events rush passed faster than perception can amass context before we can ask what is next and we are left with a vast sense of being perplexed and it lasts until another incident shakes us from any comfort as it races into the future leaving us to cope within its wake

— Tom Hutchison
The dark spreads over me in the blackout
when there is nothing to see until I build a fire click spark click spark, click spark click spark, click spark, click spark and then the blaze catches and room fills with the aroma of pine and oak and hickory
the dried wood
that has been waiting for me to turn it into warmth
and light

— Tom Hutchison

Spark
Micah A. Mattson

Hello! My name is Micah Mattson. I am 16, home schooled, and I'm completely new to writing poems. I am really happy to be included in the anthology in spite of my poor rhyming skills. I got started with this contest as a writing assignment, and found it to be a great way to get emotions out. I write from whatever emotion I'm feeling at the time, though I find that I write best when I’m in pain. I've had a crazy school year, and gone through some really hard things, but it has inspired some of my best poems.

Mary Haley Perry

Mary Haley Perry's love of poetry bloomed as her sisters "sang" the poems they were memorizing in school. With a love of writing and literature, she began her professional career as a high school English teacher and over the next four decades worked in a variety of public education positions in Louisiana, Texas, and Arkansas. Mary writes about her life, and Pay Dirt memorializes the loss of her son's first tooth.

Retiring from the Arkansas Department of Education in 2017, Mary and her husband of 43 years reside in Jacksonville, Arkansas.

Jan Hamlett

Jan Hamlett is a retired English teacher who lives and writes in Little Rock, Arkansas. Her poetry has appeared in Grit, Calliope, and the online journal Plum Tree Tavern. Jan’s stories and essays have been published in Women Alive, The Wittenburg Door, and Chicken Soup for the Soul: Thanks Dad, as well as online in Sonic Boom and Bewildering Stories. She can also be found on YouTube presenting two of her stories for the radio show Tales from the South: “Turnabout” and “Since I Saw Him Standing There.” She is pleased and honored to be included in this anthology.

Tom Hutchison

I write constantly. For a business audience, I try to make the complex clear. For my friends, I try to be funny and engaging or at least brief. For myself, I write poetry. While my commitment to it ebbs and returns throughout my life, it is a constant. I write poetry in my head even when I’m writing nothing at all. Hal, my wife of more than 25 years, has come to accept it. My daughter Sarah shrugs it off, but the words keep coming, waiting for the chance to be written down.

Rachel Armes Luebke

Rachel Armes (Luebke) began writing for pleasure at age 8, creating song lyrics with a friend during summer play dates. She has been writing poetry for 19 years, and it continues to be her main creative outlet, along with singing and gardening. In 2013, she graduated Summa Cum Laude with a technical writing degree from UALR, and in March 2017 she began working as a grant writer with the UAMS Institute for Digital Health & Innovation after working briefly for Arkansas’ child welfare system. She lives in Little Rock with her four-year-old daughter, Isabelle, and their beloved cat, Joanie.

Micah A. Mattson

Hello! My name is Micah Mattson. I am 16, home schooled, and I’m completely new to writing poems. I am really happy to be included in the anthology in spite of my poor rhyming skills. I got started with this contest as a writing assignment, and found it to be a great way to get emotions out. I write from whatever emotion I’m feeling at the time, though I find that I write best when I’m in pain. I’ve had a crazy school year, and gone through some really hard things, but it has inspired some of my best poems.

Mary Haley Perry

Mary Haley Perry’s love of poetry bloomed as her sisters “sang” the poems they were memorizing in school. With a love of writing and literature, she began her professional career as a high school English teacher and over the next four decades worked in a variety of public education positions in Louisiana, Texas, and Arkansas. Mary writes about her life, and Pay Dirt memorializes the loss of her son’s first tooth.

Retiring from the Arkansas Department of Education in 2017, Mary and her husband of 43 years reside in Jacksonville, Arkansas.
Shirley Sticht Schuette

Wonder the noun means surprise at the unexpected. Wonder the verb means to ask questions. That wondering describes me. I might take a watch apart because I wondered how it worked. Others got weary of my questions because I wondered what was really happening. I kept going up the trail because I wondered what was around the next turn. I had trouble finishing my thesis because I wondered about just one more point. So being an archivist who researches history to prepare documents for patrons of CALS Butler Center for Arkansas Studies is just about the perfect job for me.

Luis Uzcategui

Luis Uzcategui is a poet by day and a bartender by night. When not playing classical guitar, he can be found experimenting with an array of other instruments, or partaking in one of his many hobbies like kayaking, hiking, and foraging. A scholarly poet, he holds degrees in Art, Psychology, and Chemistry. He draws inspiration from his scholarly passions and tries to tie them in with Nature and the beauty of this weird world. His poetry is meant to be both read aloud and contemplated silently, like an audible whooshy wind that leaves a slight chill.

Anna M. Walthall

My signature, AWOL, stands for A World of Love (and Laughter). I smile every time I sign my name because it reminds me that this is what I am striving to help create for us all. I am a poet, writer and artist, which bring a lot of happiness into my life. Often times, I laugh when penning a silly poem, even more so when I consider how others may potentially chuckle with me when they read it. A good day for me is when I can entertain people or give them something to think about through my own ponderings.