Library News

Hello, Summer!

June is packed with activities for all ages. From Juneteenth to Summer Reading Club, CALS is bubbling with potential. This year we are kicking off SRC with events all over the system. From color wars and photo booths to concerts and magicians, this year's program lives up to the theme "Oceans of Possibilities." We also partnered with Community Bakery to sell cookie decorating kits inspired by the SRC theme, with $5 from each kit sold helping to support library programming.

As we move into summer, many children who rely on lunches provided through school might find themselves without. CALS helps to reduce hunger by offering lunch (and in some cases breakfast) at 11 of our 15 branches through Be Mighty. Find out more on page 8.

It's also important to note that Summer Reading is not just for kids. This month Jonathan Martin, co-author of New York Times bestselling book This Will Not Pass, will appear at the CALS Ron Robinson Theater, and Sloane Crosley will join us virtually to discuss her book Cult Classic.

Before we officially say goodbye to spring, we wanted to take this moment to remind the library faithful how much we value their support. We are honored to be among 15 library finalists competing for the Institute of Museum and Library Services (IMLS) 2022 National Medal for Museum and Library Service. Your stories helped CALS achieve national recognition. We can't wait to see who wins this month!

Some of the biggest (and best) library news came on May 24. CALS was on the ballot, and once again, Little Rock voters demonstrated the trust they have in us. Last November, when we asked residents to increase the millage, we did so with a promise that we would use our next proposal to reduce taxes. The measure passed with more than 60% of the vote. We're excited about what comes next.

As always, we will keep the public informed about our plans and progress as it happens. We thank you again for your investment, trust, and commitment to CALS.

OPENING EXHIBITIONS

Allen Jarvis: Land, Water, and Sky

JUNE 10-AUGUST 27 • LANDING GALLERY

Many of the places that inspired these simple abstract landscapes of land, water, and sky are in Arkansas and Alabama, especially in the wetlands area of upper Mobile Bay. Artist Allen Jarvis uses objects like yardsticks, rulers, and brightly colored protractors—affixed to reclaimed wood—to build the playful bridges and manmade structures from memory, creating joyful paintings that remind him of the journeys that inspired them.

Yard Work: Inspirations

Found in Our Own Backyards

JUNE 10-OCTOBER 1 • UNDERGROUND GALLERY

In this exhibition featuring four artists who first met each other in the University of Central Arkansas Art Department over a decade ago, Kristen Spickard, Barbara Satterfield, Brityn Davis, and Deborah Kuster have come together again to showcase their artistic responses to nature and backyard experiences.

Fun fact: Kentucky coffeetrees are rare today. One theory for this is that their seeds were intended to survive being digested by mastodons and giant sloths, and without that exposure to stomach acid, the seeds don't germinate. Learn about this and more, and bring your questions!

"I was hooked from the first chapter. Cult Classic is easily the funniest fiction I've read this year. Crosley brings the same offbeat humor she utilized to acclaim in her nonfiction to this novel that defies easy categorization. Riotously funny, suspenseful, weird, and insightful, it's a unicorn of a book that's a perfect summer read if you're looking for something that'll make you laugh while keeping you on your toes." —Buzzfeed
